The official X (formerly Twitter) account for the short anime of Sakura Kurihara's Let Me Fix You (Kimi o Tsumugu) yuri manga stated on Friday that the anime is now planned to be released in mid-June.

The account stated the staff "will still publish whatever is already started and paid, but without Buta Productions or FAR involved anymore." The remaining staff are however delaying the anime from a previously planned May release "due to the incident and the time we needed to sort things out."

The announcement added that while "the current scope of the project is secure, the future beyond that remains uncertain." The announcement explained the project was "originally intended to be much bigger than what has been announced so far," and now the project has "had to adjust the plans for everything beyond that until we find a new studio that is willing to take on the project with us."

The full statement made on Friday can be read below:

German publisher Dokico had originally announced on April 4 that it was working with Buta Productions on the short anime, and Dokico originally announced that the short anime would begin streaming on YouTube in late May.

On May 2, a user on X/Twitter named Maryco (@Maryco02_) had made a now-deleted post accusing Federico Antonio Russo (also known as FAR), the co-founder and co-producer of Europe-based animation studio Buta Productions, of allegedly grooming her. Maryco then stated on May 6 she would like "to formally retract" her accusations against FAR.

An X/Twitter account for Ponbleu, a group that claims to represent former staff members of Buta Productions, issued a statement on May 5, stating that the former staff of Buta Productions have separated and reorganized themselves without the involvement of FAR. The statement additionally added, "ButaPro's statements to the media do not reflect our thoughts and opinions on this matter." The statement also lists that Ponbleu is "operating as an informal entity in order to fulfill prior obligations with clients."

ANN had also reached out to Dokico last week and the company stated it will remain involved with the project, and will be "responsible for the planning and communication between all involved parties."
